Brand New Book  Print on Demand .When Einstein said that The universe is not only weirder than we imagine, but weirder than we can imagine. he vastly underestimated its weirdness. Our senses are optimized, in conjunction with our brain, our awareness and consciousness, to have us survive as fear-driven Homo sapiens. Those limited senses have still allowed us to get to the point where we are ready to evolve into Homo spiritus, a love-driven species. If we are to efficiently evolve into that new species, however, before we destroy the ability of this beautiful blue planet to support us, we are going to have to better understand the difference between what we think that we sense and the reality of this universe and planet. We are also going to have to quickly understand the distortions in what we have been told about who we really are and why we are here. In the early phases of our development we understood, implicitly, that we had many ways of seeing the world around us, and that we had at least six senses that helped us see. Some scientist who did not really understand the limitations inherent in traditional science have been telling us for a few centuries that we are the result of random chance, are separate beings, not only from each other but from our universe, and that there is no purpose for our existing. The messages are coming from scientists who do not understand how little they really know about the universe and about the founding assumptions of science. They are seriously wrong! As very recent science is now telling us, this is a universe of mostly empty space even in...
